Aztec clothing

The Aztecs made art mostly because they thought that it would please the gods and bring good fortune.

Inspired by birds such as macaws and quetzal, craftsmen used feathers to make headdresses, pictures and decorated shields. Skilled workers wove brightly coloured feathers together to create beautiful cloaks and headdresses. Only the king and the nobles could wear them.

Clothes and garments would be embroidered with different motifs and symbols that have different meaning. Emperors wore capes and headdresses to show off their riches and power. Cloth and clothing were crucial to people of all social statuses within the empire.
